

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

PH.D. PROGRAM IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

"The University of Chicago is a leading center of research and education in political science. The Ph.D. program in political science is one of the most rigorous and demanding in the world. It provides students with a strong foundation in the theory and methods of political science, and prepares them for careers in academia, government, and public policy."

The Ph.D. program in political science at the University of Chicago is a five-year program. Students must complete 72 credits, including 24 credits in the core curriculum, 24 credits in the area of concentration, and 24 credits in electives. The core curriculum includes courses in political theory, comparative politics, international relations, and quantitative methods.

Students in the Ph.D. program in political science are encouraged to pursue research in a variety of areas, including political theory, comparative politics, international relations, and quantitative methods. The program also offers a wide range of elective courses, allowing students to tailor their education to their interests and career goals.

The Ph.D. program in political science at the University of Chicago is a highly competitive program. Students must have a strong academic record and demonstrated research potential. The program is designed to provide students with a rigorous and demanding education, preparing them for careers in academia, government, and public policy.

For more information about the Ph.D. program in political science at the University of Chicago, please contact the program director at [email address]. The program director can provide information about the application process, the curriculum, and the research opportunities available to students in the program.

The University of Chicago is a leading center of research and education in political science. The Ph.D. program in political science is one of the most rigorous and demanding in the world. It provides students with a strong foundation in the theory and methods of political science, and prepares them for careers in academia, government, and public policy.