

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON ECONOMIC RECOVERY AND DEVELOPMENT

The International Conference on Economic Recovery and Development was held in Washington, D.C., from October 1-5, 1981. The conference was organized by the International Development Research Institute (IDRI) and the International Labour Office (ILO). The main theme of the conference was the role of international organizations in promoting economic recovery and development in the wake of the global economic crisis.

The conference brought together representatives from over 50 countries, including both developed and developing nations. The participants discussed the challenges facing the world economy and the need for coordinated international action. Key topics included the impact of the global recession, the role of international organizations, and the need for structural reforms in developing countries.

The conference was a landmark event in the history of international development. It provided a unique opportunity for policymakers and scholars to share their views and experiences. The conference also resulted in the adoption of several important resolutions and recommendations, which have served as a guide for international organizations and governments in their efforts to promote economic recovery and development.

The conference was a landmark event in the history of international development. It provided a unique opportunity for policymakers and scholars to share their views and experiences. The conference also resulted in the adoption of several important resolutions and recommendations, which have served as a guide for international organizations and governments in their efforts to promote economic recovery and development.

The conference was a landmark event in the history of international development. It provided a unique opportunity for policymakers and scholars to share their views and experiences. The conference also resulted in the adoption of several important resolutions and recommendations, which have served as a guide for international organizations and governments in their efforts to promote economic recovery and development.

The conference was a landmark event in the history of international development. It provided a unique opportunity for policymakers and scholars to share their views and experiences. The conference also resulted in the adoption of several important resolutions and recommendations, which have served as a guide for international organizations and governments in their efforts to promote economic recovery and development.

The conference was a landmark event in the history of international development. It provided a unique opportunity for policymakers and scholars to share their views and experiences. The conference also resulted in the adoption of several important resolutions and recommendations, which have served as a guide for international organizations and governments in their efforts to promote economic recovery and development.

The conference was a landmark event in the history of international development. It provided a unique opportunity for policymakers and scholars to share their views and experiences. The conference also resulted in the adoption of several important resolutions and recommendations, which have served as a guide for international organizations and governments in their efforts to promote economic recovery and development.

