

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

The Commission on Human Rights, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1946, was the first international body to deal with human rights. It was replaced in 1993 by the Human Rights Commission, which was in turn replaced by the Human Rights Council in 2006. The Council is the main human rights body of the United Nations.

The Human Rights Council is a subsidiary body of the United Nations General Assembly. It was established in 2006 to replace the Human Rights Commission. The Council is composed of 47 member states, elected by the General Assembly for three-year terms.

The Council's mandate is to promote and protect human rights. It does this through a variety of mechanisms, including the Universal Periodic Review (UPR), the Human Rights Council Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, and the Human Rights Council Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances. The Council also has a Human Rights High Commissioner, who is the highest-ranking official in the United Nations system responsible for human rights.

The Council's UPR mechanism is a unique and important part of the human rights system. It allows all countries to be reviewed by their peers on their human rights records. The UPR process is based on the principle of universality, meaning that all countries are subject to the same standards and procedures. The UPR process is also based on the principle of transparency, meaning that the reviews are public and the findings are made available to the public.

The Council's Working Group on Arbitrary Detention is another important mechanism. It is responsible for identifying and ending cases of arbitrary detention. The Working Group has issued several reports and recommendations, and has been instrumental in securing the release of many prisoners of conscience.

The Council's Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances is also an important mechanism. It is responsible for identifying and ending cases of enforced or involuntary disappearances. The Working Group has issued several reports and recommendations, and has been instrumental in securing the release of many disappeared persons.

The Human Rights Council is a vital part of the United Nations human rights system. It is the only international body that can hold all countries accountable for their human rights records. The Council's work is essential for the promotion and protection of human rights around the world.
